EULOGY TO DEAD CHIEFTAIN

HASKELL SPEAKS WARM TRIBUTE TO PLEAS- ANT PORTER

LOSS WILL BE FELT OVER ENTIRE STATE

One of the Most Rigidly Honest, Intelligent and High-Minded Men

Collinsville, 1. T., Sept. 5.—Recd. for the first information concerning the sudden death of Chief Pleasant Porter at Vinita, yesterday, C. N. Haskell, the Democratic nominee for governor, paid a sincere and touching tribute to the deceased Indian chieftain, in his speech here today.

"I have learned since my arrival in your city of the very sudden death of one of the foremost citizens of the Indian Territory, my friend and neighbor, General Pleasant Porter," said Mr. Haskell. "To say that it grieves me but ill expresses the keen sense of personal loss I feel in the untimely demise of the man who has done so much for the Creek nation in the years of the past, and before whom such a field for further accomplishment would have opened, could he but have lived to see the consummation of statehood."

"Through an intimate business and social acquaintance covering a period of almost seven years, I have come to regard General Porter as one of the most rigidly honest, intelligent and high minded men with whom I have ever come in contact. His loss will be felt, not alone by the Indian tribe of which he has been the leader in their remarkable adaptation of the ways and methods of white civilization, but by the entire state. It is from the advice of the living and the example of the dead, more than anything else, that the state of Oklahoma must draw the inspiration, if the structure we build is to fulfill the promise of present opportunity."

"During the morning Mr. Haskell attended by invitation a meeting of the commercial club of Collinsville called to consider the advisability of accepting a proposition for the installing of a lead and zinc smelter in this city. The future governor was asked to address the body and agreed to talk politics, but this he refused to do."

"I will leave the discussion of political questions until this afternoon," he declared, "but I hope you members of the commercial club of Collinsville will not become impressed with the idea that the establishment of a state government is not a business proposition that should be handled by business men and along business lines. We have had an experience of sufficiently long duration, of government administered simply as the plaything of politicians. The time has arrived when the honest farmers, merchants and laboring men of Oklahoma to take charge of her affairs."

An audience of 500 persons gathered to the chamber of commerce rooms at 7 o'clock in the afternoon and listened for two and a half hours while the Democratic nominee discussed the proposed constitution and gave a brief history of its making. Throughout his address Mr. Haskell was frequently and at its close he was surrounded by dozens of voters eager to grasp the hand of the first governor of the new state.

FADES AND FASHIONS.

New York, Sept. 5.—Early Fall styles are now being shown in materials, suits, and hats. It is reported that small hats will be worn for a while and that many will be made of fine qualities of cloth, which is quitted before being draped on the hat. If this be true, it is quite evident that braids will have a part to play in millinery.

The Autumn materials offer such pretty novelties in checks, plaids, stripes and mixed goods. The plaids will be seen mostly in the separate skirts, as designers find it difficult to produce good lines in a coat made of that material. The chevron stripe in the monotone or mixed colors the narrow stripes showing a mingling of three colors, and the medium stripes in two-tone effects, will be shown for the new suiting. Scotch cheviot and broadcloth will be considered for the more elaborate suits, and for the costumes, soft satin-finished silks and pliable velvet will be much in demand.

Prettier than ever are the designs in colored handkerchiefs, that are continually being shown. A favorite one is now lavender crossed off with hair lines of deep blue-purple. A plain white handkerchief has a border of blue check and is particularly dainty looking. The color of the stripe must match or harmonize with the gown, and the pale tan can be found barred off with every obtainable color, so that this problem is not a difficult one.

Veils are shown in all kinds and varieties. The chiffon veil still holds its purpose for astoundingly and traveling, it being tied over the hat and fastened securely at the nape of the neck. The net veil invariably has an inch or two of fluted border of chiffon sewed all around it, or a plain band of velvet ribbon may be chosen in the place of the fluted border. Black point despit makes an elaborate lace veil with a delicate border of black lace. This veil is cut to fit the hat, curved in the upper part and wider in the back than in front. It folds prettily about the face, and just touches the shoulders all the way around.

Fashionable women who have the pet dog craze have gone a step farther in their devotion to these animals. The dog that accompanies my lady must be chosen to match her gown, with reference to color and entertainment. A woman in mourning should carry a Pomeranian, or King Charles spaniel. To go with a light afternoon frock, a white poodle or light tan Yorkshire terrier is quite correct. The homely bindle ball terrier is the only choice for the athletic girl, and the Irish setter for the sportsman. With a walking dress, the greyhound should be the choice and with the cheviot tailor made, the French bulldog is the thing.

Worsted suitings come to the front for the early Fall models. The short-skirted walking suits are plaited and trimmed with bands of self-trimming. In coats, the tendency is toward the trim length or 32 inches coat, made semi-long or three quarter fitting. Velvet collar and cuffs are shown on some and others are finished with the same material as the suit.

Jewelry made from coral is at present in great demand. The bluish pink has taken the lead of the red, while white is used only in mourning. Such handsome fecton necklaces are shown in all coral combined with pearls and other jewels. Coral vandy made in scarf pins, bracelets, brooches and earrings are all favored styles. They are not only carved in classic heads, but in miniature busts, skulls and various animal and bird heads.

It is a little difficult to tell whether braids will continue to be used through the winter months as but few models have been received from Paris. Nearly all the models in long separate coats shown on this side of the water are elaborately braided with sequins and other braids or silk embroidery. The sportsche braid is the most favored for it can be attached so closely as to look as though it is a part of the material.

For some time combs and hair ornaments have been given much attention by the jewellers. So many of the combs have jeweled backs, while some have solid gold trimmings. The dainty designs in brilliants are perhaps as attractive as any. Back combs are still growing larger. Massive ones are made in exact imitation of those worn by our great-grandmothers. The pearl gray combs that were first brought out a few years ago and received with little favor are in great demand at the present time. They are made plain and mounted and are worn to match the hair.

The ostrich plume, which, this summer, has been the favorite trimming aside from flower, will be used to a great extent on all Fall hats. It will be taken from the summer hat and put on the next one, possibly dyed another color. A heavy beautiful feather shows off to the best advantage, when it sweeps across the crown from right to left, and hangs gracefully over the left ear. Particularly handsome are the white ones with shaded tips of shell pink or pale lemon, or those of a dark color growing lighter at the end.

HASKELL ENTHUSES FARMERS

THOUSANDS HEAR CONSTITUTION CHAMPION AT SHAWNEE

PRESENTS COLD FACTS IN LOGICAL MANNER

Scathingly Arraigns Existing State of Affairs in Two Territories

Special to Daily Leader.

Shawnee, Okla., Sept. 5.—As a fitting finale to the Labor day celebration, seemingly the larger half of the population of Shawnee turned out to meet C. N. Haskell, Democratic nominee for governor and hear his address in the Auditorium. Mr. Haskell was met at the depot by several thousand people and escorted to the Norwood hotel in a barouche, a long procession of automobiles and carriages containing ladies and prominent members of the reception committee, forming a parade that extended for over half a mile through the business streets of the city.

Mr. Haskell spoke during the afternoon to some one thousand farmers at McAlester, and was accompanied by a party of Democratic enthusiasts from that place who wished to hear further of his views on existing issues of the campaign.

Mr. George Bellamy, candidate for Lieutenant governor, had also been billed to make an address at each place, but had yielded to the solicitations of the citizens of his home town of El Reno to assist in their Labor day celebration and was not present.

At 8 o'clock Mr. Haskell was escorted to the Auditorium, and for two and one-half hours addressed a crowd which was estimated at from eight to twelve thousand people, there being some difficulty in arriving at even an approximation of the total number present owing to the overflow of auditors who were unable to find seats or even standing room in the spacious auditorium and who had massed themselves outside the open walls on the lawn and in the darkness.

Mr. Haskell opened his address with an eloquent tribute to the womanhood and the ladies of the territory, brought out by the immense number of ladies present, and in which the said that history was but repeating itself in that all great movements for the common weal had been preceded and fostered by an intense interest on the part of the wives and daughters of the common people.

The speaker then proceeded to deliver an address which, for its calm, cold logic in the presentation of the existing state of affairs in the two territories, and the manner and method of bringing about a change for the better by statehood and the proposed constitution, and the telling illustrations covering all points which, to a layman or a lawyer, might have otherwise appeared esoteric, wrought up the crowd into a pitch of enthusiasm far in excess of anything of the nature ever witnessed in the city, and when he finally brought his address to a close with an appeal to the people to read the constitution for themselves and judge for themselves of its intrinsic worth and merits, using their own judgment in forming a decision as to whether they should vote to turn it down, or accept it as the organic law of the new state with officers sworn to uphold and enforce its provisions, the enthusiasm of the crowd knew no bounds.

A noticeable feature of the audience was the large proportion of farmers from all parts of the adjoining country who had remained in to hear the distinguished speaker. This, however, has been a feature of all Mr. Haskell's addresses; as it seems that the great majority composing the farming element of the state are taking a phenomenal deep interest in the issue at issue, and in the candidate for whom they returned on a large majority in the primaries and delegate elections.
